THE EARLY SETTLEMENT OF DELAWARE COUNTY

“Nothing but a hideous and howling wilderness.”
- David Brainard, A Christian Missionary, 1744

THE FRONTIER OF NEW YORK IN THE REVOLUTION
(Present County lines inserted.)

By Tim Duerden

By the 1600s and 1700s the northwestern Catskills formed a borderland between two rival Native American confederations. Mohawk and Oneida tribes of the Iroquois Confederation used the area around the two branches of the Delaware River and Susquehanna as hunting and fishing grounds. To their south lay the hunting grounds of the Lenni-Lenapé (Delaware) Indians, members of the Algonquin Federation.

There were perhaps only two permanent Native American settlements in what was to become Delaware County. One (Lenapé) may have been at Cookooze (Cookhurse), in the town of Deposit, where a village was situated. (The first name given to the later European-American settlement there was Cookhouse.) The other native settlement (Oneida) was approximately at the current location of the village of Sidney, at the junction of the Susquehanna and Unadilla rivers.

Elsewhere in the region, it appears the terrain was too rough, the winters maybe too harsh and the availability of food sources too scarce to support year-round human habitation and settlement.

In the years leading up to the American Revolution (1775-1783), the Catskill Mountains became part of the western frontier of European-American settlement in North America. As far as white people were concerned, this inhospitable, upland region was “empty,” for the most part devoid of people. As late as 1744, David Brainard, a Christian missionary sent to “save” native souls along the Upper Delaware and Susquehanna rivers, reported finding “nothing but a hideous and howling wilderness.”

By the second half of the eighteenth century, as people of European ancestry began moving into this “howling wilderness,” the indigenous people found themselves involuntarily pushed north and west, many ending up in Onaquaga (today, Windsor in eastern Broome County).

Despite this gradual migration by Native American groups out of the Catskills and Delaware County, in the decade prior to the Revolution intrepid European-Americans in the land of the Delaware and Susquehanna still commonly reported the presence of Mohawks, Mahicans, Tuscaroras, Oneidas, Stockbridge, Wappingers, and Lenapé.

Before this, even as early as the first decades of the eighteenth century, much of the Catskills region, although still only sparsely inhabited by European-Americans, had been apportioned out in patents to wealthy speculators. This followed the earlier Dutch tradition in New Netherland of granting large tracts of land to “patroons.”

One patent in particular encompassed all of what was to become Delaware County as far to the north and west as the Mohawk (West) Branch of the Delaware River. The Hardenburgh Patent, often referred to as “The Great Patent,” was an area of 1.5 million acres granted by the English government in 1708. The Hardenburgh Patent encompassed land in Delaware, Ulster, Greene and Sullivan counties.

By 1749, when the entire Hardenburgh Patent was first successfully surveyed, the patent was divided into “Great Lots,” averaging 100 to 160 acres each. Many of these lots are still recognizable on the map of the Catskills today in the form of either private land boundaries, or those of certain political entities.

The French and Indian War (1756-1763) fought between British Colonial America and the French, and each side’s Indian allies, largely passed Delaware County and the Catskills by. However, one result of the war literally influenced the future shape of the county. In 1768, five years after hostilities had ceased, a treaty was signed between British authorities and members of the Iroquois Six Nations at Fort Stanwix, near Rome, New York.

A major component of the Fort Stanwix Treaty was to establish what was essentially a border separating the European-American controlled areas of North America from the Native-American further to the west. Part of the demarcation line drawn on the map still today forms the western boundary of Delaware County, running due north from Deposit on the Delaware River through Masonville and into the town of Sidney and the Susquehanna River and beyond.

Meanwhile, a few months before the Fort Stanwix Treaty, Colonel John Harper, a land speculator from Connecticut, secured by deed over 250,000 acres between the future Johnson Purchase and the Hardenburgh Patent at the headwaters of the West Branch of the Delaware River. General John Bradstreet thereafter secured the land west of the Harper Purchase.

Further division of the county continued in 1770 when Sir William Johnson secured a deed for a mile-wide strip of land on either side of the Charlotte River (named after Queen Charlotte, wife of English King George III) from its source westward to its confluence with the Susquehanna River and beyond.

The first white settlement in the land that would become Delaware County is an issue that is open to some question - partly as to what the definition of “settlement” actually is. Trappers, explorers, teams of surveyors and other intrepid frontiersmen all passed through the region in the late 1600s and early 1700s.

It seems reasonable, however, to assert that the first white settlers in the county were Palatine Germans who came to the northern reaches of the county via the Schoharie Valley and Charlotte River in the first years of the eighteenth century, settling in what was to become the town of Davenport.

The next evidence of regular European-American activity in the county came in 1734 when a group came to what is now Hancock along the Delaware River in search of mining opportunities. They were followed fairly regularly in the next couple of decades by groups of surveying parties.

A primitive home.

In the 1740s further white settlers began to move into the Catskills from the east and northeast, traveling overland through the mountains along Indian trails, or utilizing the region's many waterways. In the summer they traveled by canoe, in winter overland by sled or atop the frozen rivers.

By 1763 a group of French-speaking Protestants (Huguenots) had taken up residence at Pakatakan, near present day Margaretville, followed shortly thereafter by white settlers moving into Colchester in 1766 and at Sidney, along the Susquehanna, in 1770.

For the most part, these new arrivals built temporary shelters of poles and bark and then constructed simple log cabins in forest clearings. They then began the vital business of hunting, trapping, planting crops and just trying to stay alive.

In the 1770s Scotch-Irish settlers began to find their way down the West Branch of the Delaware River, establishing tiny communities of log homes in Kortright, Stamford and Harpersfield. Many of these pioneers were drawn to the county with an offer issued by the British colonial government of land free of rent for the first five years. In 1773 settlements were made within the William Johnson Purchase at Sidney and further east in the Charlotte Valley.

The Revolutionary War essentially put a halt to most white settlements of the region and many of the residents who had arrived here in earlier years picked up stakes once again and fled to the relative safety of more populated areas.

However, not everyone left, as a few hardy souls chose to remain among the remote mountains of the frontier. Their numbers, however, were few and far between. During the war perhaps a mere 100 white settlers were located in a few tiny settlements dotting the region, including Harpersfield, Pakatakan, Sidney, Kortright and Stamford.

A number of skirmishes took place in Delaware County during the Revolution and the closest thing to an actual battle occurred in September 1778 near present-day Downsville. There, fifty-two state militiamen under the command of Captain Samuel Clark fought about thirty-five or more Indians, allied with the British, under the command of "Captain" Ben Shanks.

In the town of Harpersfield in April 1780, the so-called "Sugarbush Massacre" took place when a number of residents of that area, who had fled to the safety of the Patriot fort at Schoharie after the outbreak of war, returned to gather sap from their maple trees. Unfortunately for them, they were attacked by loyalists and their native allies, resulting in the deaths of three settlers. Several others were captured.

Another instance of military action, this time in the western portion of the county, took place in 1778, when an ally of the British, Mohawk Chief Joseph Brant, occupied the area around old Unadilla on the Susquehanna River (present day Sidney) and proceeded to fortify the village. In 1778 George Washington gave orders to destroy such native villages on the headwaters of the Susquehanna, and in October of that year, Colonel William Butler, traveling from the fort in Schoharie, complied with the directive, burning the settlement to the ground.

After 1783 and the end of the war, former settlers and newcomers slowly repopulated the upstate region, including Delaware County, many of them taking over the land recently vacated by loyalists. Some of these newcomers occupied land granted them by the state as a reward for service during the war - often in lieu of military pay.

The new arrivals generally followed the course of the river valleys where they eventually settled, avoiding the upland terrain with its far more dense forest cover. Free from roots and larger trees the alluvial valley soils could be easily worked with hand-held hoes, a necessity for poor pioneer families lacking in oxen or plows. During the early and mid-1780s the newcomers also benefited from an abundance of game in the region, for the war had allowed the population of deer and bear to rebound during a time when hunters had been absent from the forests.

In general, in the years after the Revolution, New York officials were looking to encourage as many settlers as possible to move west to the frontier beyond the more heavily settled Hudson Valley and Mohawk Valley.

The movement of such settlers from east to west into and eventually beyond the Catskills and on to former Iroquois lands formed part of the massive general demographic shift in New York state and United States history that was to continue for much of the nineteenth century.

Among these post-revolutionary pioneers to the Catskills and Delaware County were numerous groups from the "Old World," including Scots, Scotch-Irish and Germans. In addition, many settlers made their way to the Catskills from lower New York state and New England - a movement made up very much of second- and third-generation descendants of original settlers in America.

The isolated communities along the riverbanks and in forest clearings slowly grew in size, and as the eighteenth century drew to a close, buildings of a more communal function joined the individual log cabins and houses. One-room schoolhouses, churches, water-powered grist- and sawmills, and eventually general stores and a post offices here and there were constructed to fulfill the needs of growing settlements. The mountains would be forever changed.

Despite numerous hardships inherent in frontier life, by the mid-1790s the population of the region had increased to the extent that the New York State Legislature was petitioned by local inhabitants to establish a new county.

Revolutionary War veteran, judge and Ulster County state legislator Ebenezer Foote of Delhi, was a leader in the drive to get the necessary legislation passed, and in March 1797, when enough support in the legislature had been secured, the region officially became known as Delaware County.

The first meeting of the Delaware County supervisors took place May 31, 1797 at the home and tavern of Judge Gideon Frisbee in the town of Delhi.

The new county encompassed land that had once been part of Ulster County - south and east of the West Branch of the Delaware River - and Otsego County (earlier a part of Montgomery, Tryon and Albany counties) - incorporating the territory between the West Branch of the Delaware and the Susquehanna rivers. Delaware County was at first made up of a mere six towns and its population stood at a little under 10,000.

Gradually during the nineteenth century other towns were created in the county so that by 1880, with the establishment of the town of Deposit, the number of towns stood at nineteen. No new towns have been added since that time.

Elevate your plate!

The Good Taste Epicurean Food Market Experience:

The Greek Philosopher "Epicurus" is known for encouraging people not to eat large meals but to eat food that is the most pleasurable. Good Taste Epicurean Food Market is a specialty food store for people who are serious about cooking and who love to eat.

Carefully sourced from close-to-home and around-the-world, we bring you culinary delights that will delight your senses, nourish your body and elevate any occasion. Nothing quite satisfies like small-batch, hand-crafted foods. When you discover the difference, you won't go back. Visit us today for a true taste sensation.

Food is increasingly part of the "craft movement" in this country and today's consumers want their food to be artisanal. Artisanal and craft foods are anything made in small batches rather than mass-produced.

Good Taste Market offerings focus on imported and locally sourced artisanal cheese, handmade pasta, baked goods, small batch fresh roasted coffees, artisan cured meats, olives, jams, olive oil, balsamic vinegar, honey, crackers, and gourmet cooking ingredients.

We provide individualized customer service, fresh artisanal quality food and ingredients, and "onestop" shopping not found in supermarkets, convenience stores or farm markets.

Mentors Wanted

Catholic Charities is currently recruiting volunteers for our Mentoring Program in Delaware County. Volunteers will act as mentors to at-risk youth ages 7 - 17 years.

Requirements: meet with his/her youth at least 2 hours per week for a minimum of 1 year, provide support, guidance and encouragement to youth; must be at least 18 years of age, possess a registered and insured vehicle, a current driver's license, and pass a screening process. Mentors have the opportunity to make a meaningful difference in the life of a young person.

If interested in volunteering or FMI please contact Jordyn Fradenburgh via email at jfradenburgh@charitiesccdo.org or call: 607.604.4071
